

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
AT SEATTLE

BRIAN HEINZ, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated,

Plaintiff,

v.

AMAZON.COM INC., and DOES 1 through 10, inclusive, and each of them,

Defendants.

CASE NO. 2:23-cv-1073

ORDER GRANTING MOTION TO DISMISS

In this putative class action, Plaintiff Brian Heinz alleges Defendant Amazon.com, Inc. violated California law by recording electronic conversations with Plaintiff and other putative class members without their knowledge or consent. Dkt. No. 21 at 2. Amazon.com moves to dismiss the case, arguing Heinz's claims rest on inapplicable California state law given Amazon.com's Conditions of Use ("COUs") for its website which state that Washington law will govern any dispute. Dkt. Nos. 21, 52. The Court agrees with Amazon.com, and for the reasons explained below, GRANTS Amazon's motion to dismiss.

1. BACKGROUND

1.1 Factual Background.

On Amazon.com's website, there is a notice next to the "[p]lace your order" button, which reads "[b]y placing your order, you agree to Amazon's privacy notice and conditions of use." Dkt. No. 53 at 69. The "Conditions [of Use] must be accepted. ... every time the customer places an order." Dkt. No. 30 at 5. Heinz made several purchases on Amazon.com. Dkt. No. 21 at 4.

The COU contains a "[d]isputes" provision. Dkt. No. 53 at 8. It provides: "[a]ny dispute or claim relating in any way to your use of any Amazon Service will be adjudicated in the state or Federal courts in King County, Washington[.]" Id. The COU also contains a choice-of-law clause under the "Applicable Law" section, which provides that Washington law governs "any dispute of any sort that might arise between you and Amazon." Id. at 9.

The Privacy notice informs customers that Amazon.com "receive[s] and store[s] any information you provide in relation to Amazon Services" and does so "to provide and continually improve our products and services." Dkt. No. 53 at 37. It also indicates that Amazon.com "employ[s] other companies and individuals to perform functions on [its] behalf," and "[t]hese third-party service providers have access to personal information needed to perform their functions[.]" Id. at 38.

Between July and September 2022, Heinz visited Amazon.com's website using his cellular phone. Dkt. No. 21 at 4. He had text conversations with Amazon.com using the chat feature on Amazon's website. Id. Amazon recorded its

1 conversations with Heinz. Id. But Heinz was unaware that Amazon was recording
2 these conversations. Id.

3 1.2 Procedural History

4 In January 2023, Heinz filed his initial complaint in California Superior
5 Court for the County of Yolo. Dkt. No. 1-1. On February 15, 2023, Amazon removed 6 the case to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of California.
7 Dkt. No. 1. On April 21, 2023, Heinz amended his complaint. Dkt. No. 21. His 8 amended complaint only alleges violations of California law, including California's 9 Invasion of Privacy Act (CIPA) Section 632 and California's Unfair Competition
10 Law (UCL). Id. On May 19, 2023, Amazon moved to transfer venue to the Western 11 District of Washington, or in the alternative to dismiss. Dkt. No. 24. On July 11, 12 2023, the Eastern District of California granted the motion and transferred venue
13 to this District. Dkt. No. 30 at 13. On September 15, 2023, Amazon.com filed a 14 renewed motion to dismiss, arguing that Washington law governs Heinz's dispute
15 with Amazon which dooms Heinz's claims under California law. Dkt. Nos. 21, 52. It
16 also argues that even if California law applied, Heinz failed to state a viable claim 17 under the California laws. Dkt. No. 52.

18 2. DISCUSSION

19 2.1 Legal standard.

20 The Court will grant a motion to dismiss only if the complaint fails to allege 21 "enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v.
22 Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007). "A claim has facial plausibility when the 23

1 plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable
2 inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal,
3 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (citations omitted). The plausibility standard is less than 4 probability, “but it asks for more than a sheer possibility” that a defendant did 5 something wrong. Id. (citations omitted). “Where a complaint pleads facts that are 6 ‘merely consistent with’ a defendant’s liability, it ‘stops short of the line between 7 possibility and plausibility of ‘entitlement to relief.’” Id. (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S.
8 at 557). In other words, a plaintiff must have pled “more than an unadorned, the-9 defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusation.” Id.

10 When considering a motion to dismiss, the Court accepts all factual
11 allegations pled in the complaint as true and construes them in the light most 12 favorable to the plaintiff. Lund v. Cowan, 5 F.4th 964, 968 (9th Cir. 2021). But 13 courts “do not assume the truth of legal conclusions merely because they are cast in 14 the form of factual allegations.” Fayer v. Vaughn, 649 F.3d 1061, 1064 (9th Cir.
15 2011) (citations omitted). Thus, “conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted 16 inferences are insufficient to defeat a motion to dismiss.” Id. (citation omitted).

17 2.2 Judicial Notice.

18 As an initial matter, Amazon.com asks the Court to take judicial notice of 19 these documents:

20 Exhibit 1. An image of the Amazon.com Conditions of Use (“COUs”)
21 publicly available on the Amazon.com website from at least June 1, 2021
22 through September 13, 2022, as they appeared on June 1, 2021.
23 Goldmark Decl.

1 Exhibit 2. An image of the COUs publicly available on the Amazon.com
2 website from at least June 1, 2022 through September 13, 2022, as they appeared on September 13, 2022.

3 Exhibit 3. An image of the COUs publicly available on the Amazon.com
4 website from September 14, 2022 through at least October 3, 2022, as they appeared on September 14, 2022.

5 Exhibit 4. An image of the COUs publicly available on the Amazon.com
6 website from September 14, 2022 through at least October 3, 2022, as they appeared on October 3, 2022.

7 Exhibit 5. An image of the Amazon.com Privacy Notice ("Privacy
8 Notice") publicly available on the Amazon.com website from February
12, 2021 through June 28, 2022, as it appeared on the Amazon.com
9 website on February 13, 2021.

10 Exhibit 6. An image of the Privacy Notice publicly available on the Amazon.com website from February 12, 2021 through June 28, 2022, as it appeared on the Amazon.com website on June 28, 2022.

11 Exhibit 7. An image of the Privacy Notice publicly available on the 12 Amazon.com website from June 29, 2022 through December 31, 2022, as it appeared on the Amazon.com website on June 29, 2022.

13 Exhibit 8. An image of the Privacy Notice publicly available on the 14 Amazon website from June 29, 2022 through December 31, 2022, as it appeared on the Amazon.com website on December 31, 2022.

15 Exhibit 9. An image of the Purchase Page as it appears on the 16 Amazon.com website, obtained on April 5, 2023.

17 Exhibit 10. The Washington Secretary of State's Business Information 18 page for Amazon.com, Inc., reflecting Amazon is incorporated under the laws of Delaware and has its principal office in Seattle, Washington.

19 Dkt. No. 54 at 2-3.

20 Heinz did not oppose Amazon's motion, so the Court considers his failure to 21 respond an admission that the motion has merit. LCR 7(b)(2). Typically, courts are 22 confined to the contents of the complaint when considering a Rule 12(b)(6) motion.
23

1 But judicial notice under Federal Rule of Evidence 201 is an exception to this rule.
2 Khoja v. Orexigen Therapeutics, Inc., 899 F.3d 988, 999 (9th Cir. 2018). Courts may 3 take judicial notice of facts that are “not subject to reasonable dispute.” Fed. R.
4 Evid. 201(b).

5 The Court first considers the COUs, Privacy Notices, and Amazon.com’s
6 Purchase Page. See Dkt. No. 54. Under Fed. R. Evid. 201, the Court may take 7 judicial notice of “matters of public record.” Each of these documents is publicly 8 available on Amazon’s website and their authenticity is beyond reasonable dispute.
9 Accordingly, the Court takes judicial notice of Exhibits 1-9. Dkt. No. 53 at 5-69.

10 Amazon also asks the Court to take judicial notice of the Washington
11 Secretary of State’s business information for Amazon page. Under Fed. R. Evid.
12 201, the Court make take “judicial notice of ‘official information posted on a 13 governmental website, the accuracy of which [is] undisputed.’” Ariz. Libertarian
14 Party v. Reagan, 798 F.3d 723, 727 n.3 (9th Cir. 2015) (quoting Dudum v. Arntz, 640 15 F.3d 1098, 1101 n.6 (9th Cir. 2011)). Courts routinely take judicial notice of 16 information contained in the public records maintained by the Secretary of State of 17 the State of Washington. See, e.g., SEC v. Lidingo Holdings, LLC, No. C17-1600-
18 RSM, 2018 WL 3608407, at *2 (W.D. Wash. July 26, 2018). Plaintiff does not 19 dispute the authenticity. Accordingly, the Court takes judicial notice of Exhibit 10
20 as well. Dkt. No. 53 at 70-73.

2.3 Choice of Law

Ordinarily, when a case is transferred under 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a), “the state law applicable in the original court also appl[ies] in the transferee court.” Atl. Marine Constr. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court for W. Dist. of Texas, 571 U.S. 49, 65 (2013). But when, as is the case here, “a [§ 1404(a)] transfer stems from enforcement of a forum-selection clause,” courts apply the choice-of-law rules for the court in the contractually selected venue. Id. at 65-66. Because the Eastern District of California concluded the case must be transferred to this District under a valid forum-selection clause, Dkt. No. 30 at 12-13, Washington’s choice-of-law rules will control, Atl., 571 U.S. at 64-65.

Washington courts “generally enforce contract choice of law provisions.” Schnall v. AT & T Wireless Servs., Inc., 259 P.3d 129, 131 (Wash. 2011). But “[w]here parties dispute choice of law in the face of a contractual choice-of-law provision, Washington courts first determine (1) whether there is an actual conflict of laws between the two proposed states, and if so, (2) whether the choice-of-law provision is effective.” ACD Distrib., LLC v. Wizards of the Coast, LLC, No. C18-1517-JLR, 2020 WL 3266196, at *4 (W.D. Wash. June 17, 2020), aff’d, No. 20-35828, 2021 WL 4027805 (9th Cir. Sept. 3, 2021) (citing Erwin v. Cotter Health Centers, 167 P.3d 1112, 1120 (Wash. 2007)). “If the result for a particular issue is different under the law of the two states, there is a ‘real conflict.’” Shanghai Com. Bank Ltd. v. Kung Da Chang, 404 P.3d 62, 65 (Wash. 2017) (quoting Erwin, 167 P.3d at 1120). As the party contending that some other state law applies, Heinz bears the burden of proving the existence of a conflict of law. Erwin, 167 P.3d at 1122.

1 Heinz argues that it's too early for the Court to make a choice-of-law
2 determination at the pleading stage of the case, but the Court disagrees. "The 3 question of whether a choice-of-law analysis can be properly conducted at the 4 motion to dismiss stage depends on the individual case. . . . As long as a court has 5 sufficient information to thoroughly analyze the choice-of-law issue . . . and 6 discovery will not likely affect the analysis . . . , it is appropriate for the Court to 7 undertake a choice-of-law analysis at the motion-to-dismiss stage." Bartel v. Tokyo
8 Elec. Power Co., Inc., 371 F. Supp. 3d 776, 790 (S.D. Cal. 2019) (internal citations 9 and quotation marks omitted). Heinz has neither identified facts that still need to 10 be discovered nor provided the Court with a legitimate reason to delay analyzing 11 the choice-of-law issue now.

12 2.3.1 The choice-of-law clause encompasses both of Heinz's claims.

13 Heinz argues that his claims do not fall under the COUs' choice-of-law 14 provision because they "arise in tort," so the Court must first determine whether the 15 choice-of-law provision "extends to all, some, or none of" Heinz's claims. Carideo v.
16 Dell, Inc., 706 F. Supp. 2d 1122, 1126 (W.D. Wash. 2010).

17 Even though "[c]laims arising in tort are not ordinarily controlled by a 18 contractual choice of law provision," Sutter Home Winery, Inc. v. Vintage Selections,
19 Ltd., 971 F.2d 401, 407 (9th Cir. 1992) (citation omitted), this general principle does 20 not override the Court's obligation to "interpret contract provisions[, including 21 choice-of-law provisions,] to render them enforceable whenever possible." Schnall, 22 259 P.3d at 131.

1 Here, the choice-of-law provision is extremely broad, purporting to apply
2 Washington law to “any dispute of any sort that might arise between you and 3 Amazon.” Dkt. No. 53 at 9. Thus, the objective manifestations of the parties’ 4 agreement “i.e., ‘the actual words used’-rather than on the unexpressed subjective 5 intent of the parties,” Carideo, 706 F. Supp. 2d at 1127 (internal citation omitted), 6 makes clear that the COUs’ broad choice-of-law provision encompasses claims that 7 arise in tort, including both of Heinz’s claims.

8 2.3.2 There is an actual conflict of law.

9 Next, the Court must consider whether there is an actual conflict between 10 Washington and California law on each of Heinz’s claims. As to his first claim, 11 Heinz does not identify any conflicts between the Unfair Competition Law of 12 California (“UCL”) and its analog the Washington Consumer Protection Act
13 (“CPA”), so the Court need not conduct a choice-of-law analysis on this claim.

14 As for his second claim, Heinz alleges three differences, between California
15 Invasion of Privacy Act (“CIPA”) and its closest corollary, the Washington Privacy
16 Act (“WPA”). To start, Heinz argues that unlike the CIPA, the WPA requires a 17 showing of actual damages. Heinz, however, does not explain whether this 18 difference would produce a different outcome given that he alleges that he did in 19 fact suffer an injury. See Dkt. No. 59 at 25. Moreover, Heinz has not argued that his 20 alleged injury would be insufficient to state a WPA claim. This is not a conflict that 21 would produce a different outcome in the case.
22

1           Next, Heinz suggests that the WPA, unlike the CIPA, “may only apply to 2 individuals not corporations.” Dkt. No. 59 at 7. But as Amazon.com argues, this 3 “hunch” is easily dispatched by the plain language of the WPA, which prohibits 4 individuals, corporations, and others from intercepting or recording private 5 communications and conversations. RCW 9.73.030(1); see State v. D.J.W., 882 P.2d 6 1199, 1201–02 (Wash. Ct. App. 1994) (“[T]he Privacy Act makes it unlawful for 7 private ... entities to intercept or record any “[p]rivate conversation....”).

8           Lastly, Heinz argues “the WPA does not apply to communications involving 9 electronic data.” Dkt. No. 59 at 7. But the WPA applies to private conversations and 10 communications transmitted by any electronic device, which necessarily involves 11 electronic data. RCW 9.73.030(1); see State v. Roden, 321 P.3d 1183, 1187 (Wash.
12 2014) (text messages between cellular phones is afforded the same protection from 13 interception that are recognized for telephone conversations under the WPA).
14 Relying on State v. Bilgi, Heinz also claims that the Washington Court of Appeals 15 has held that “the WPA does not apply to ‘computer software’ because it is ‘not an 16 actor with an agency’ under Wash. Rev. Code Ann. § 9.73.030(1).” Dkt. No. 59 at 12.
17 Heinz is wrong again, however. In Bilgi, the court held that software used to send 18 text messages to the defendant from a detective’s computer did not independently 19 “intercept” the defendant’s communications, but at no point did the court hold that 20 an individual or entity using computer software could not be liable under the WPA.
21 496 P.3d 1230, 1237 (Wash. Ct. App. 2021).

22           To the contrary, in State v. Townsend, the Washington Supreme Court held 23 that the WPA applied to computers running “real time client-to-client” instant

1 messaging software capable of recording and saving the messages. 57 P.3d 255, 257-
2 262 (2002).

3 Thus, Heinz fails to carry his burden of showing an actual conflict between 4 the WPA and CIPA or the CPA and UCL. “Where laws or interests of concerned
5 states do not conflict the situation presents a false conflict and the presumptive
6 local law is applied.” Shanghai Com. Bank, 404 P.3d at 65 (internal quotation
7 marks omitted). So the Court need not continue its choice-of-law analysis or 8 consider whether Heinz’s California claims are well pleaded. Heinz’s last-ditch
9 argument that a comment by Amazon.com’s counsel during oral argument somehow
10 estops the company from arguing that Washington law precludes Heinz’s claims 11 lacks merit and does not forestall the Court’s ultimate conclusion.

12 3. CONCLUSION

13 Because Washington law controls this dispute, Heinz’s complaint containing 14 exclusively California claims fails to state a claim on which relief can be granted.
15 Accordingly, the Court GRANTS Amazon.com’s motion and DISMISSES Heinz’s 16 complaint without prejudice.
